

"It's My Next Dance"

By Nell Brinkley

THE New Year, with his scant, baby hair brushed tight to his baby head in the latest man fashion—his sash across his shoulder and a bow on his hip—but—toss his gloves and watches the clock with a merry Robin-like eye. "Just three minutes, old top," he chirps, "and you have danced you last. It's my dance then. Though I'm very little and new I can Maxixe and Tango with Youth till the pale dawn comes and Youth will slip easily and gladly out of your shriveled arms into mine own pink ones. What does an old dandy like you—bent upon your legs—bowed of back—scarred of face—smiling through a web of wrinkles—do, Tangoing here till midnight? But Youth, she says, has found you a great comrade. With you she has found laughter and tears and stirring, nameless, countless emotions. Hardly has she seen the wrinkles come and age burn out your spirit. And she loves to dance with you. But when she turns her lovely arms next time the midnight bells will be a singing—and suddenly to her eye you will be monkey-old—she will see death already on your brows—and out of your arms she will twirl to mine! Three more minutes old top—and it's my dance next!"

HEAVY SNOW INTERFERES WITH SAWMILLS AT WEED

Weed, N. M., Dec. 31.—On account of the heavy snows the sawmills have been compelled to suspend operation. Snow from four to five feet deep covers the mountains.
The heavy snow overweighed the roof of D. F. Johnson's barn, causing it to cave in, badly injuring his teams. One animal probably will die.
